From steve

Good journalists don't rush stories out even if the subjects think they have a scoop. What a scoop is means a different thing to a writer and to an editor. They aren't always right but this kind of timing is totally normal.

07:18:27 pm

He will likely be unemployed or change jobs before a new head. It is likely he is hoping this story gets him a job. In that case it can't be salacious and break ethical rules because that won't get him a job at a tier 1 outlet. Jee should know you have that over him.

07:18:42 pm

He seems like a real journalist -at least to me.

07:21:57 pm

He spent a long time at Newsweek and probably got laid off. And took the yahoo job at a peak and now sees layoffs happening. Things aren't going as planned for him and that's a bummer. Every writer has some bitterness and it comes out in their coverage of powerful people.
